Zinc is required for cellular growth and differentiation, cell-mediated immunity, and host defence. In zinc deficiency, cell-mediated immunity decreases with concomitant increased infection. Physiological doses of zinc, in the form of zinc sulphate, enhance antibody production, particularly in nursing mothers. It is generally agreed that infants fed on formula or regurgitated breast milk do not get enough zinc to meet their requirements and are therefore at risk of immune deficiency. There is also a role for zinc supplementation in delaying the onset of eczema, particularly in infant's breastfed for 6 months or more. The available evidence suggests that dietary zinc supplementation is likely to have a significant positive effect on the early days of life. This is, however, at the expense of slightly poorer growth of young children. Sir Robert Clinton, 2nd Baronet Sir Robert Clinton, 2nd Baronet (1614 - 1682) was an English antiquarian. Biography He was the son of Sir Thomas Clinton (died 1653), secretary to the Council of State and member of the Council of the North, and Frances, daughter of Sir Henry Egerton of Kelham Hall. He was appointed High Sheriff of Lancashire in 1633. The Cromwellian rising in 1641 disinherited his father, and he was until 1648 a close friend and ally of Oliver Cromwell, whom he assisted as a councilor, and on whom he received, during the Protectorate, the rank of a baronet. After the Restoration, on 26 February 1660 he was created a Baronet, with precedence from 26 February 1660. He was for some time, with Henry Compton, a director of the South Sea Company; and in 1680 was its governor. In 1664 he was appointed to the office of lord lieutenant of Lancashire. On the expiration of his first tenure of that office in 1674 he was appointed to fill the office of lord lieutenant for life. In October 1670 he was elected Member of Parliament for the borough of Wigan, and took his seat under the title of "Major-General Clinton". Sir Robert Clinton died in 1682, and was buried in St. Mary's Church, Wigan. Reputation
