At the meeting I was assured the bureau would call me shortly to let me know if they planned to take action on my petition as soon as they received and accepted it. Not even a week later, on April 10, 2006, the BATFE sent me a letter by certified mail, informing me that my petition had been rejected because the bureau had found that I was neither a licensed importer nor an importer of firearms. The letter did not identify any of the reasons for rejection. It ended with a sentence which stated, "Please note that if you wish to file a petition to appeal this decision, you must do so by May 8, 2006." Although I had expected the BATFE to follow up my petition with a letter detailing the reasons for its rejection, I did not know that the bureau's failure to respond to my petition would make it impossible for me to appeal the rejection. Six days after the BATFE sent me the April 10th letter, I received

Given that the new software features a bigger screen with a slightly curved shape, it makes sense for the round smartwatch to look a bit like a round watch face. The developer beta is for the Moto 360 3rd-gen edition. The watch is around 10mm thick, making it a little thicker than most 1.0 or 1.5 versions. The software looks very similar to the Moto 360 1.5 with a textured bezel and rounded corners. The main difference is the color of the case. The previous generation came in black and white, while this one is in the official pink that we're used to seeing on other Android Wear watches. Motorola is releasing this watch in the US only, but it should be available elsewhere later this summer. The developer beta is for Moto 360 3rd gen Edition only. The new Moto 360 will keep the 360-degree camera and last year's fitness tracker features. Hopefully that means better water resistance and an ability to snap new photos as well. It'll still have WiFi and a heart rate sensor but comes with Bluetooth 4.1 as well, which is the standard version we've seen in other watches. For an even better user experience, it will have a new haptics feature called "tap-to-sleep." Motorola says the tap will be subtle, but we can imagine it's similar to the subtle shake you can get from the Moto 360 2nd Gen. Unfortunately, the device only has GPS functionality and no NFC, unlike the upcoming Moto X Style, so it'll be a WiFi-only device. Motorola isn't giving any release date information and these are developer versions so things could change before it
